Iowa alumni chapters welcome more members

UNI Alumni Association Chapters across Iowa are gaining more and more members. We're very pleased with the interest and time devoted by those who have helped organize and run these chapters. The Alumni Office advises them in any way we can and tries to have one member of the staff at each chapter event.

It's important to remember that these chapters are for UNI alumni of all fields. In addition, alumni are a valuable asset to the University through work with student recruitment, athletic recruitment, support of University projects and general public relations for UNI. Above all, the chapters provide a way for you to see old UNI friends and make new ones at social gatherings.

All of the Iowa chapters welcome more members. We've provided a list of chapter chairmen, home telephone numbers and a brief update of chapter events. If you're interested in seeing people who share UNI as a common factor, get in touch with the chairman in your area. In the future, we'll give information on the out-of-state chapters.

Des Moines: David Oman, president, 279-7571; Sam Scheidler, v.p. This chapter, organized this year, had a spring dinner for 65 alumni. In the summer they had a picnic which drew 75 alumni and families. For the UNI-Drake game, the chapter sponsored a Hospitality Room after the game for approximately 150 Des Moines alumni plus Panther backers from Cedar Falls.

Ottumwa: Chairman — Jerry Taylor, 682-1185. Their event was a dinner a year ago with speakers Chuck Patten and Glen Henry from the UNI mens' physical education department.

Quad-Cities: Co-Chairmen - Mr. and Mrs. Richard James, 355-8254, Bettendorf, and Mr. and Mrs. Dave Lawson, Davenport. Last June the group of 75 alumni gathered for a picnic in Scott County Park. They're planning their second event after the first of the year.

Cedar Rapids: Co-Chairman - Ron Rath, 393-0920, and Dave Bunting, 393-7360. A group of Cedar Rapids alumni chartered a bus last spring to Cedar Falls for the annual Jazz Concert at UNI.

Dubuque: Co-Chairmen - Mr. and Mrs. Larry McCreedy, 556-1927 and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wysocki are organizing the chapter and soliciting ideas for the first event.

Mason City: Chairperson Betty Burley, 423-5755. About 40 area alumni attended a dinner in June, 1974, and about the same number were present for an August dinner at the country club.

Iowa City: Co-Chairmen - Morris Adams, 351-1210 and Duane Waters. The newest chapter is just being formed. Co-chairmen sent out letters to 400 area alumni and received about 100 responses suggesting chapter events.

The cover: Homecoming '75 proved to be a smashing success as the cover scenes show. For more pictures, see pages 6 and 7.

Ma Commons recalls the '50s

Because "ties with the past are essential" to her, Mrs. Irene Eaton took many UNI memories with her when she moved to Guam last fall. Known as "Ma Commons", Mrs. Eaton was the hostess at the UNI Commons from 1937 until 1972. She has left Cedar Falls, but there are hundreds of alumni who remember her and she remembers hundreds of them in return.

At a feisty 75 years of age, Mrs. Eaton changed her world. Her son, his wife and four children who have lived in Guam 10 years, built a new home and Mrs. Eaton joined them.

During her time at the Commons, Mrs. Eaton's favorite years were the late 1940's and 1950's after the GIs returned from World War II. "They brought an invigorating movement to the campus. They'd returned from many branches of the service and shared experiences covering the Pacific to the Atlantic," she recalls.

Besides the GIs, Mrs. Eaton said she "knew the names or faces of just about everyone in school." UNI was much smaller then and she felt there was "cohesion among the students and the faculty. Students really knew their teachers."

Evidence of this was the weekly variety shows presented from the stage at the Commons. Sometimes students from the dorms or Greek houses presented skits and other times faculty members displayed their talents. Mrs. Eaton worked backstage adjusting lights and curtains for these presentations and others.

She was also an avid sports fan. But, because of her irregular hours, she didn't make it to all the UNI sports events. Even so, she actively supported track, gymnastics and basketball. "I liked these sports because I could watch individuals develop athletic skills," she exclaimed. In the fall of 1967 the I-Club presented her with an I-Club sweater and an honorary life membership to the I-Club. Mrs. Eaton is still elated about the presentation and declares, "I'm the only woman who can say 'My fellow I-Club men.'"

Mrs. Irene Eaton reminisces about Cedar Falls and UNI as she prepares to pack some mementos to take with her to Guam. She holds a school bell from Hardscrabble, Dutch Creek Township in Iowa where her mother and relatives attended school.

Two other significant events occurred in the 1960's for Mrs. Eaton. She received an Alumni Service Award for her years of service to UNI in 1964. A UNI alumna, she graduated in 1921 with a degree in social sciences. In 1966 the Men's Union declared her the "Favorite Girl of 1966". Mrs. Eaton expained, "They were tired of the same people being queen, so they voted and I won."

As Mrs. Eaton approached her retirement in 1972, she saw a strong change in UNI students. The days of the 1950's and '60's when there were few infractions of the rules were gone, she said. "In those days the freshman class was absorbed into the student population quickly. But now the class is indigestible and freshmen don't seem to become adults until their junior year."

Those days are gone and Mrs.

Eaton is now facing new challenges. Convinced that her move to Guam was right, she isn't missing the harsh Iowa winters. "Winter is my worst enemy" she admits and besides, "I just never seemed to catch up on getting things done the last few years."

As she enjoys the Guam weather and green landscape, Mrs. Eaton is working on her 400-page compilation of a family geneology and her stamp collection. In between she serves as the family cook. Eric Eaton, B.A. '56, M.A. '68, is an industrial arts instructor at the University of Guam and his wife also works.

In other plans, Mrs. Eaton wants to buy a sophisticated radio so she can listen to English broadcasts from Russia, the Phillippines and Japan. She plans to stay as busy in Guam as she did for 64 years in the white wood house on 22nd Street.

Policy board meets, rental rates told

The UNI-Dome Policy Board at its first meeting discussed rental rate schedules and heard construction progress report and budget projections.

Dr. Robert A. Stansbury, vice president of administrative services, called the meeting and presented the rate schedule. In establishing the schedule, rates were compared with similar structures throughout the United States. Richard Brownell, who was recently appointed acting manager of the UNI-Dome, said the rates seem to be consistent with the national trend. He added that rates will depend on the nature of the event.

The minimum costs for use configuration are: small court, $440; field, $800; stage I (5,000 seats), $440; stage II (8,000 seats), $700; stage III (15,000 seats), $900. The total cost for admission events will be 15 per cent of cash value of tickets sold or the minimum, whichever is the greater. Charge for non-admission events will be the minimum with the addition of direct and salary administrative charges.

Lee Miller, director of Alumni Affairs, commented, "The Board felt the rate schedule was a starting point. We want to keep the rates as low as possible to make the facility useful to a variety of groups but also cover our maintenance costs. The rates should be flexible."

Stansbury also reported that the State Board of Regents at its September meeting approved three change orders on the multi-purpose coliseum. These were brought to the Regents following their July action to add $490,000 to the UNI-Dome project budget to complete the west side of the structure. The changes essentially provide for additional west side structural development, including restrooms, office areas, balance doors, concourse entrances to the arena, sign identification, precast treads and risers and the necessary mechanical and electrical accessories to complete the development of these areas.

The Policy Board heard a construction report from Tom Paulson, UNI Director of engineering services. Initial roof installation, (putting the fabric in place), began Oct. 1 and should have been completed in 4-8 weeks. The dome should be ready for occupancy Jan. 1, 1976.

The risers on the east side are basically complete. Those on the west side were scheduled for completion in mid-October. As of this writing, the base for the entire floor area was being readied. This asphalt base goes beneath the two synthetic surfaces. As the roof nears completion, the base will be applied in preparation for the final installation of the recreational floor.

In other building matters, parking will be developed as necessary and Hudson Road is still scheduled to be overhauled by the Highway Commission in 1977. When the UNI-Dome is completed, O.R. Latham Stadium will be phased out of active utilization and eventually razed to provide the site of the Fine Arts Auditorium, the second phase of the UNI Foundation's Centennial Fund Drive.

The Policy Board elected James Heinz, vice president of Colle & McVoy, Inc., as chairman.

The Policy Board, established by the President's Cabinet early this year, will develop policy on the operation, maintenance and programming of the UNI-Dome. It will review long-range programs submitted by the UNI-Dome Program Committee, recommend major physical alterations and improvements and prepare an annual report for the University and the UNI Foundation. This Board is responsible to the vice president of administrative services.

The Board consists of one member of the UNI Foundation Board appointed by that group, the director of Alumni Affairs, three students, one member of the UNI faculty appointed by the vice president and provost, two appointed from the UNI staff and two community representatives appointed by the vice president of administrative services, the director of Mens' Athletics and the UNI-Dome manager who will serve as the executive secretary and an ex-officio nonvoting member.

Members of the Policy Board include T. Wayne Davis, president of the UNI Foundation; Lee Miller, director of Alumni Affairs; Dr. Gaylon Halverson, professor of accounting; Dr. Elinor Crawford, professor of physical education for women and chairperson of the faculty; Don Tiernan, director of UNI data processing; Stan Sheriff, director of men's athletics; two community members - Frank Standish, president of Viking Pump Division of Houdaille Industries of Cedar Falls, and James J. Heinz, vice president of Colle & McVoy, Inc., a Minneapolis-based advertising agency with a local office in Waterloo; and three UNI students - Larry Norman (elected to a two-year term), Pat Burke and John Struck.

UNI group celebrates five year anniversary

Homecoming '75 Review

The homecoming parade winds its way to College Hill.

UNI alumni were treated to a variety of programs and personalities as they celebrated "UNIfication" for Homecoming '75 on Oct. 25.

Starting with the traditional Homecoming Variety Show, the program moved into a busy Saturday. The Homecoming Parade kicked off the celebration. Led by Grand Marshal Herb Hake, UNI's first man of radio, the parade wound its way from Main Street to College Hill. An alumni luncheon in the Royal Oak Room of the J.W. Maucker University Union followed.

Alumni watched the UNI Panthers perform for the last time in the O.R. Latham Stadium against Augustana. Seated with alumni were several members of the first UNI jazz band who returned to celebrate that occasion and were recognized.

Also recognized was Mrs. Robert Lounsberry, (Muriel Dirks, B.A., '42), who was crowned Homecoming Queen in 1940, the same year the stadium was dedicated. Mrs. Lounsberry returned to UNI with her husband, Iowa secretary of agriculture, who attended State Day activities.

A Post-Game Reception was held at the Holiday Inn.

Mrs. Muriel Dirks Lounsberry, first Homecoming Queen in O.R. Latham Stadium, received roses from her son. She is with husband, Robert Lounsberry, state agriculture secretary who was at UNI for State Day.

Groundbreaking sets stage for three departments

Speech-Arts Complex bids approved

The State Board of Regents in September approved bids totaling $5,153,873 for phase I of a speech/art complex at UNI. This building, which originated in 1973 plans, will house facilities for speech, speech pathology and audiology, broadcasting and art. The structure will also contain a new theatre wing. It will be constructed west of Russell Hall at the corner of West 27th Street and Hudson Road on the former site of the University baseball field.

Lowest bids to complete the total phase I project were $6,226,382, or about 38 per cent above the estimated cost of $4.5 million. Following a number of deletions, the new number was reached.

The plan now, according to Dr. Leland Thomson, UNI director of planning, is to ask the legislators and Regents to restore the deleted portions of phase I into phase II.

Phase II is primarily art facilities. Thomson explained that the building will be "less functional in certain aspects with the deletions than it would have been. But, it is wrong to say that all is lost. Even with the cutbacks, these departments will be moving into a fine space."

Basically, the building is a new complex created for three areas that never really had facilities designed specifically for their needs and which incorporate highly technical space.

Theatre productions currently are presented in University Hall of the J.W. Maucker University Union or the Auditorium. The new design calls for a proscenium-thrust theatre. The design began as a masters thesis by a UNI graduate in 1969 for Yale University.

The proscenium-thrust theatre will be flexible for many types of programs and ideal for the spoken drama. It will have about 525 seats arranged in Continental-style seating (36 inches between the backs of seats.) The seats will be at a steep rise similar to those at the Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis.

The acoustics are being designed so that whether performing in regular proscenium fashion (the audience looks in on the action as in a box) or using a thrust, presentation (the seating is on three sides of the actors) everyone will be able to hear.

The theater was also recently named when the Regents approved the name Strayer-Wood Theater. The name was proposed by the UNI Department of Speech and endorsed by the President's Cabinet. It honors two long-time contributors to theatre at the University - Hazel B. Strayer, who retired in 1956 following 30 years of service, and Stanley G. Wood, a former director of the theatre program who is a professor of speech in his 31st year at UNI. Hazel Strayer was the first to establish a full scale theater program on the UNI campus with the technical design staff, equipment and curriculum. Wood was a student at the time the program originated.

Another aspect of the building for speech is the experimental lab which has been modified since initial plans. It will have heat and lighting, Thomson revealed, but not the refinements necessary to accommodate actual performances. It will be for practice purposes only.

Speech pathology and audiology facilities are basically intact after the deletions, except for some equipment that may be in jeopardy. Broadcasting Services facilities remain in place with three studios being planned.

Other deletions from phase I include some speech offices, a small art gallery, offices and conference area for the dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, a portion of the sidewalk and landscaping funds along with some equipment monies.

Dr. Janet Travis, dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, addresses the audience during the groundbreaking ceremony for the Speech-Art Complex. Groundbreakers seated on the platform are: Front Row (l. - r.): R. Wayne Richey, executive secretary, State Board of Regents; Harry G. Slife, member State Board of Regents; John J. Kamerick, UNI president; Dr. Roy Eblen, head, department of speech pathology and audiology. Back Row: Stanley Wood, UNI professor of speech; Dr. Jon Hall, head, department of speech; Douglas Vernier, director of broadcasting services; Ella Mae Gogel, president Friends of KHKE and KUNI; Patricia Moes, founder, local cleft palate parents' club; Charles Blaine, graduate student representing Dr. Eblen.

Accounting majors win CPA honors

Two University of Northern Iowa 1975 spring graduates recently were honored for achieving two of the highest scores in Iowa and the nation on the May Certified Public Accountant (CPA) exam.

Jerry Koester, son of Mr. and Mrs. D.J. Koester of Waterloo, and Tom McLaughlin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Francis McLaughlin of West Des Moines, joined the ranks of UNI graduates who have excelled on the CPA exams. Both received the Sells Medal Award certificate which is awarded nationally by the American Institute of CPAs. A total of 38,306 persons took the exam and only 66 of these certificates were awarded in May.

Dr. Thomas Reuschling, head of the UNI School of Business, said on the last nine CPA exams, 40 per cent of UNI grads passed on the first attempt. On five of the last nine exams UNI graduates had the highest scores from the State of Iowa. The national average pass rate is 8 to 10 per cent.

Why do UNI grads score consistently high on the rigid exam?

"Our secret really isn't a secret at all," Dr. Reuschling said. "We simply have seven instructors who collectively do an outstanding job in the classroom. They prepare their students and have a rigorous interest in the student as an individual."

The test for any college graduate is what happens following graduation. Prominent accounting firms interview UNI prospects every year. Koester is now employed by McGladrey, Hansen and Dunn in Cedar Rapids and McLaughlin is employed by Coopers and Lybrand in Des Moines. Last year's UNI Sells Medal awardee, Richard Redfern of Cedar Falls, is working for Coopers and Lybrand's office in Minneapolis.

The primary purpose of the UNI accounting program is to prepare students for positions of responsibility in the business community by presenting them with a curriculum that is designed to provide: a basic background of general education helpful to informed citizens in society;

a mastery of basic business tools and skills; and a specialized and professional knowledge of accounting theory and practice.

The UNI department has experienced a healthy growth in the number of students enrolled in its courses. According to Dr. Gaylon Halverson, coordinator of the accounting program, the total number of students enrolled in accounting classes this fall is 1,530 compared to 594 in 1967. In the beginning accounting class there are 613 students compared to 301 in '67.

"I think our courses prepare the students for their chosen profession," Dr. Halverson said, "but the program is only as good as the students."

"The students as a group know what they're after and work extremely hard to get that degree," Dr. Reuschling commented. "They know the payoff. They know they're in a good department and they can get the good jobs."

Among the firms interviewing at UNI are Peat, Marwich, Mitchell and Co.; Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.; Price Waterhouse and Co.; J.C. Penney and Co.; and Arthur Andersen and Co.

"Our program on paper is probably not a great deal different from other schools," Dr. Reuschling said. "It's just a darn good traditional program that we make work."

Administration building named for Gilchrist

The State Board of Regents in October approved naming the Administration Building on the University of Northern Iowa campus Gilchrist Hall, in honor of James C. Gilchrist, who served as principal of the Iowa State Normal School throughout its first decade, 1876-1886.

With the naming of the facility Gilchrist Hall, all former presidents of UNI (Seerley, Latham, Price and Maucker) are recognized by campus facilities which bear their names.

trust/'trəst/

2.a: dependence on something future or contingent: hope.

3.a: a property interest held by one person for the benefit of another.

The UNI Foundation hopes you believe one definition follows the other. The University now depends on educational trusts from its alumni(ae) for the growth of UNI and its students.

You, too, will benefit if you set up a trust. Consider these points:

- Deferred interest from the trust is immediately deductible.

- Amounts paid to individual beneficiaries can qualify for favorable tax treatment.

- There's no capital gain tax on your paper profit when you transfer appreciated securities to the trust.

- The trust might save thousands of dollars in estate taxes.

Hollywood engineer donates scholarship

Eugene F. and Mary E. Grossman

A $20,000 scholarship fund has been established at the University of Northern Iowa. The Eugene F. and Mary E. Grossman Scholarship Fund was established by Grossman who attended UNI from 1915-17. The fund is handled by the UNI Foundation.

Recipients of the grants are to be UNI students working for proficiency in the technical field rather than creative field of radio, television or motion pictures. Grossman, who lives in Santa Monica, Calif., has worked in these fields all his life.

When Grossman came to then Iowa State Teacher's College in 1915 he brought his own radio equipment. Soon after, he was invited to set up his station 9VX in the Physics Building.

In 1917 he enlisted in the Navy which enabled him to learn more about radio in the various places he was stationed. He returned to Cedar Falls briefly after the Navy before he left for New York. There, he worked at the AT&T experimental station WBAY as an operator. He later became assistant plant manager.

When AT&T sold the broadcasting department to David Sarnoff of RCA in 1927, Grossman was retained and became operating engineer of National Broadcasting Company. At NBC his work covered the first live microphone pickups from Broadway stage shows, the World Series and the first Rose Bowl broadcast.

His next move was into the motion picture industry when he went to work for Fox Film Corp. in their Hollywood studio. During the ensuing 40 years Grossman received screen credit for over 150 feature films that included such stars as Will Rogers and Shirley Temple.

For the 40 years Dr. Julia (Judy) Sparrow taught children how to read, her main motivation was "to be of use in the world." She attributes it to her early goal to be a missionary and to several people.

Dr. Sparrow came to UNI (ISTC) in 1944 to begin her work in the Reading Center. She retired last fall as a professor of education and director of the Center. Over the years she helped develop the UNI reading program which has grown into an EDS degree, three masters degrees and two undergraduate majors.

Dr. Max Hosier, professor of education, spoke of her professionalism and said, "She devoted her life to helping children and using her unique insight into their needs and problems." Dr. Ned Ratekin, professor of education and director of the reading division, emphasized, "Professionally she is academically sound. Her consistency in what she believes should be done with children with reading problems has a cumulative effect."

Dr. Sparrow worked from the belief that "the only way a person can reach his or her full potential is by really working. Then they realize what they can become. She applied this to children and to college students.

The children she taught were one of the strongest motivations for Dr. Sparrow to continue her reading work. She said, "To see a child who is unhappy and frustrated turn a feeling of failure into one of success is true motivation." She also watched university students develop and acquire a sense of what it means to teach.

A former reading student noted that Dr. Sparrow's depth of knowledge about reading was unusual. "She has a desire to equip her students with the skills to teach reading, proficiency and background." College students found her a caring person but realized they had to work and listen if they wanted to be in reading. Dr. Sparrow was also characterized as a "direct, practical, hard-nosed person who operates in the realm of ideas."

The spring of 1974 Dr. Sparrow was honored by the Black Hawk County Council of the International Reading Association (IRA) for her "leadership in the field of reading in Iowa." The IRA collected letters from colleagues, students and friends throughout the United States to Dr. Sparrow. These were bound into a copy of the Iowa State Handbook on Reading which Dr. Sparrow helped write. This book is considered the classic state guide to reading. When Dr. Sparrow retired, the Council and UNI Reading Division established a living endowment to the UNI Foundation for a scholarship in her name.

With all this work, Judy Sparrow still knows how to take a vacation. Miss Marion Staley, a friend, said Dr. Sparrow "loves the outdoors and hiking which she couples with an extensive knowledge of Minnesota and Iowa wildflowers."

Dr. Sparrow's backyard, gardened in a planned but informal beauty, reflects one of her major interests. Her all-out hobby is birdwatching. In the backyard, there are numerous feeding stations where she has determined the birds' flight times, favored diets and feeding habits. The birds even get warm water in the winter although Miss Staley relates her friend "suffers pangs of conscience when she sees the 50-lb. sacks of birdseed delivered to her home. She feels she ought to give more money instead to the world hunger programs." But, Miss Staley continued, Dr. Sparrow also believes this is her "real outlet and recreation."

In her retirement years, Dr. Sparrow believes there will be different avenues of life to enjoy and discover. There are several places in the U.S. she would like to stay for awhile. Australia also interests her primarily because of several UNI reading grads there. She has also toyed with the idea of visiting former students in Iowa and neighboring states to see their reading programs.

Frontier women in Iowa

In conjunction with UNI's Centennial and the United States Bi-Centennial, The Alumnus presents excerpts from a talk on "Frontier Women in Iowa" given at the UNI Museum by Dr. Glenda Riley, associate professor of history at UNI.

It is difficult to deal with the history of frontier women because they don't appear very often in the textbooks and history books about the American West. This isn't too unusual, however, since women aren't very evident in history books in general. In the case of the West, women didn't hold high public office, command troops, build railroads, ride as vigilantes, or rob stages. But, even though frontier women were not highly visible, they did leave a wealth of certain kinds of historical source materials. One type is the unwritten source or artifact. Written sources are also available, primarily in the form of diaries and letters of individual frontier women.

Another kind of written source is recollections or reminiscences recorded by older women for the benefit of their children or grandchildren. Clearly then, there are viable sources that can be mined, and once that is done, we learn that frontier women were not only significant, but also very interesting.

In 1828, the first "white" woman came into Iowa and settled in the Halfbreed Track in the Keokuk area. This woman was Maria Stillwell, wife of Moses Stillwell. By the early 1830's, Iowa was officially opened for settlement with the Blackhawk Purchase. This encouraged many people to settle in Iowa because there was a government, and a legal means to claim land. So, from that point on, many women settled on the Iowa frontier.

These settlers used various means of transportation to come into the new territory. The Mott family took a stage from their home in Maine to New York, a railroad to reach the Mississippi River, a steamboat up the river, and finally a stagecoach to reach Decorah where they intended to make their new home.

The Newtons, who came in 1860, took a stage and a steamboat from Connecticut to New York, spent three days on the "cars" from Albany to Chicago, a few more days on the "cars" from Chicago to Davenport, and on the last leg of their journey, they hired a man with a team to take them to their final destination.

Most people, however, came in the more traditional way by means of covered wagon. These wagons, usually drawn by three to five oxen, covered an average of 10 miles a day, or sometimes as much as 18 miles on a particularly good day. Obviously, it was a long and slow journey which required great stamina.

The major reason people came to Iowa was the very rich and very inexpensive land available here. For most of the frontier period, Iowa land sold at $1.25 an acre. One prospective settler commented that even though land was $1.25 an acre, many times it went without takers. The Ryan family purchased their land in a very typical way. They had land warrants from the War of 1812 which they decided to invest in Iowa land in order to insure a better future for their children.

For women, there was a particularly good reason to migrate. Women were in tremendous demand on the frontier as wives and mothers. The 1838 territorial census found that there were four men to every three women. The discrepancy in numbers continued to increase after that. In 1840 there were 5,000 more men in the territory than women; in 1850, 10,000 more men; and by 1860, 14,000 more men than women.

In 1844 a national magazine reported that 41 single women arrived in Iowa on a steamboat. This was a much heralded arrival. Men gathered on the docks, many of them equipped with huge speaking trumpets. Before the women got off the steamboat, they proposed to the women through the speaking trumpets. One said, "Miss, with the blue ribbon on your bonnet, will you take me?" Apparently they received a lot of affirmative answers because the landing was followed by a mass wedding in a hotel where the befuddled preacher kept calling "Sort yourselves out, sort yourselves out" to get them into couples.

But once they got to Iowa, the women weren't always happy with what they found. Sarah Nossaman wrote: "When we got to the new purchase, the land of milk and honey, we were disappointed and homesick, but we were there and had to make the best of it." And, this is exactly what they did. They immediately set about to build homes and settle their families.

In Iowa, there were two basic types of dwellings. One was the sod shanty built in the prairie regions, and the second, the traditional frontier log cabin, was built in the timbered regions. However, not all of these dwellings were as romantic as the myth of the West presents them. When the Motts came to Iowa they lived in a sod shanty. Her outstanding memory of that house was that there was frost on the wall above the bed in the kitchen the entire winter. She also remembers her mother hanging sheets as room dividers. She said "We didn't use calico because it was too expensive and it was considered 'toney' for pioneers."

In the Archer family, the mother remembered that their first cabin had no door. They did not have the lumber available to add a door to the cabin so the first winter had to be spent without it. She decided that the only thing she could do was tack a quilt over the door which was effective in keeping out most of the snow but of little help against the wind.

For obvious reasons, most of the settlers tried to get into a fairly solid cabin very quickly. The typical cabin was one room about 16 by 18 feet. All of the family lived in that one room and all of the family tasks were carried on in that room-cooking, sewing, washing, even the laying out of the dead. These cabins were difficult to build because Iowa was not rich in lumber. One family remembers hauling their wood from 12 miles away, dragging each board with a team of oxen. The floors were usually made out of puncheons, split boards or very commonly were just packed dirt. The housewives complained again and again of, as one said the, "fleas, mice, rats and bedbugs" which infested their cabins.

The women did the best they could to make these cabins into real homes for their families. They laid hay down over the floors as kind of an early carpeting. They limed the walls with either a broom or special liming brush. They also tried to keep the dust cleaned up with damp paper or wet tea leaves.

Hospitality in these early homes was also the women's responsibility. They always had to "leave the latch string out" because there were no taverns or inns in this part of the country for people to stay in. The Whaley cabin, which measured 16 x

Mrs. Selma Paine, and ISTC student in 1915, remembers when she helped her mother grind sausage on a grinder like the one she holds. The round pan with a cover is a bread mixer and the rectangular pan to the right is a butter mixer. Other frontier items were also on display.

18, sheltered as many as 32 people on some nights. Another woman claimed that her home could hold as many people as there were puncheons in the floor.

As far as household goods were concerned, women had to provide most of the necessary items. Mattresses were ticks filled with cornhusks, prairie grass, or hay. Usually it was an annual job to rip them open, repack them, and then resew them with their fresh inner linings. Soap was also an annual activity, usually done in the spring. In a large kettle in the yard the women boiled lye made from ashes with the grease that had been collected during the winter months. The cakes of soap were formed and stored on shelves in the cellar below the cabin.

The women also had to provide lighting in the cabins; this was usually done at first by candles which were made either in molds or hand-dipped. They also had crude lamps. One type was a saucer filled with lard or grease with some twisted rags in it for a wick. They later got more sophisticated lamps with wicks and globes which created a daily task for the housewife who had to dismantle the lamp in the morning, trim the wicks and clean the globes so they could be ready for use that evening.

The cooking, which included both processing and preparing of food, was also the task of the women of the household. In the early years, the cooking was done in a kettle over an open fireplace. The kettle was attached to a crane which was pushed in and out of the fire. They also used a covered iron bake pan which was much like a Dutch oven. It was buried in the live coals and it was said that the women were so skillful they could roast a fowl, fry a steak or even bake corn dodger in that kind of oven. They were also skillful at baking bread on a board turned to the open fire. When they made bread, they spread a johnnycake board with the dough, tipped the board on its side facing the heat, and then kept turning it until the bread was browned and ready for the family.

In addition to all these jobs, it was the woman's task to be the doctor, the nurse, the apothecary, and the mortician since these people were unavailable on the frontier. Each woman had a doctor book or a receipt book or, perhaps, her own remedies on which she depended. The worst time of the year was winter in Iowa and this was when the women did most of their doctoring. They often used herbs which they either grew themselves or gathered. They brewed them into tea which was the most common way of taking medicine; made them into poultices, or dried the herbs and put them in a little cloth bag to be worn around the children's necks to ward off illness.

Quinine, if it was available, was the standard medicine for almost any ill, as was whiskey.

Between child-bearing, child care, production of household goods, cooking and treating the ill, women also produced all of the clothes for the entire family. In the early years, they started by producing the very thread and cloth. Quite often they used wool or flax and the first step was to take the burrs or seeds out to produce a fiber that could be made into thread. Then, eventually, the thread was woven into cloth. By the 1840's women were able to buy calico or gingham in Iowa for their clothing. These materials averaged 25 to 50 cents a yard which was considered very expensive.

Even though they could buy the cloth, the women still did all of the sewing themselves. Most of it was done by hand after the other household tasks were finished. One girl recorded that her mother did all of the sewing by the light of a fireplace in the evenings. A few fortunate families had sewing machines which were brought into Iowa by the 1850's.

With all these problems in producing clothing, it's interesting that the women were extremely fashion-conscious. They followed the current fashions as soon as they could and whenever they could. Every woman considered a good black silk dress an absolute necessity, especially for weddings and funerals. Every four or five years, she would rip it apart and re sew it in the most current fashion so quite often that one dress lasted a lifetime. But as soon as they could afford a few extra things, they started adopting, for example, hoop skirts.

By 1850 hoop skirts were the accepted standard for all women and even for young girls. Agnes Wilson said, "To be seen without hoops endangered a woman's standing and she was liable to be called eccentric." However, at least one pioneer housewife complained bitterly that the bottoms of her skirts kept getting singed because the hoops caused them to go into the fireplace as she was cooking.

Frontier women also accepted the bustle, the whalebone corset, and very heavily-adorned dresses and bonnets. For instance, a party gown of the 1850's had a three-flounce skirt which was very popular and even rural women who could not afford the real thing would make a dress which simulated the three flounces. A complete "dress-up" outfit consumed about 100 yards of material, including the petticoats and weighed about 15 pounds. The awkward skirts had to be anchored down so in the bottom of the skirt they sewed a metal cord similar to a drapery weight. The weight of the skirt, the petticoats, and the hoops became so great that they had to develop what was known as a "skirt supporter."

There was an unsuccessful dress reform - the Bloomer costume. An Iowa woman, Amelia Bloomer, wore the costume and thus gave her name to it although she didn't design it. The major criticism of the Bloomer costume was that it incorporated pants. It was quickly ridiculed off the frontier because it was considered a disgrace for a woman to be seen in pants.

In addition to their homes and families, Iowa women were also very interested in education. During Iowa's frontier period about 50 to 55 percent of the employed teachers were women. The usual salary was $2 a week, or $8 a month, which included being "boarded around" with pupils' families.

Girls' schools, or Ladies' Seminaries, as they were called then, were available very early to women in Iowa, earlier than in many other parts of the country. One of the first was founded in 1836 in Dubuque by a woman named Louisa King. Iowa colleges admitted women early as well. Iowa Wesleyan was one of the first Iowa schools to accept women and when Grinnell was built, it included two seminaries, or buildings; one for men students and one for women students. They did, however, locate the men's at one end of the town and the women's at the other so they would be a "safe distance" from each other.

With all their varied interests and activities, women were still lonely on the frontier for their old homes and neighbors. May Ramsey remembered from her girlhood the times when her grandmother would curl up in her rocking chair and cry for hours from loneliness. In the 1850's one woman wrote that there were "no large cities, no colleges, no railroads, no banks, no daily papers, no telegrams, no daily mails, very little money and most of that of doubtful value."

But most of the women weren't intimidated by the harsh frontier life. Many of them were active and proficient in areas besides the domestic. Marion Murdock became an ordained Unitarian minister and held the pastorate in Humboldt, Iowa. Mary Spencer became the first woman clerk of the Iowa Legislature in 1870. Kate Harrington, first famous as the author of an abolitionist novel, later developed a nationally-used series of spellers, readers and teachers' manuals and Annie Turner Wittemeyer became famous for her work during the Civil War. She served as the State Sanitary Agent, established a soldier's home for soldier's orphans, and set up diet kitchens throughout the military hospitals.

Iowa frontier women were also concerned about women's rights. As early as 1858 there is record of the topic being debated at a lyceum held in Keokuk County. As early as 1866 the issue of women's rights was discussed in the Iowa Legislature when the General Assembly appointed a committee to investigate whether the word "male" should be stricken from the Iowa Constitution. By 1880 the state was so sure that the right for women to vote was going to be approved, they allowed women to vote on some appropriation bills for schools and other public buildings. In 1916, however, the women's suffrage vote lost in Iowa and women had to wait until 1920 and the 19th amendment to actually gain suffrage.

In 1870 the U.S. Census Bureau declared the frontier of Iowa officially closed. Although a representative of the bureau said he found that the frontier women were "not gainfully employed", Iowans recognized the significance of their women. It was, after all, the efforts of the women that made it possible not only to settle Iowa, but to change it from a frontier into a home.

Nine Corcorans and how they came to UNI

The Corcoran family has a good thing going with UNI. It's so good that nine of the 10 children have attended UNI since 1961.

Ken and Kay Corcoran, who farm 175 acres near Fairbank, Iowa, initiated the UNI tradition with son number one, Charles, 32. He graduated in 1967 just before State College of Iowa became UNI. With a major in science and a math minor, Charles taught for eight and a half years in Cherokee schools. He now has an M.A. degree in biology from the University of South Dakota and recently became the State Farm agent in Eldora where he lives with his wife, formerly Mary Ann Waters, and two children.

Before Charles graduated, Pat, Paul and Colleen all enrolled at UNI. Pat, 31, graduated from UNI also in 1967 as a marketing major. He then spent part of the next two years in Viet Nam with the U.S. Army. Upon his return, he began working for Traveler's Insurance in Atlanta, Ga. Paul, 30, was at UNI from 1963-65. He was drafted, did two stints in Viet Nam and currently works for Hawk-eye Steel in Waterloo.

The first Corcoran daughter, Colleen, 27, started her UNI career the summer of 1967 but left that fall. She returned in 1970 as Colleen Corcoran Zelinsky and graduated in 1973 in business. Her husband, Dennis Zelinsky, graduated from UNI in 1972. They reside in Grundy Center.

Because the Corcorans had several children attending the university at one time, the kids more or less made their own way. Their college financing came from National Student Defense Loans, grants or scholarships. In addition, most of the Corcorans had part-time jobs as bus drivers, clerks, gas station attendants or whatever. To give them a start in college they all worked summers in high school.

While Colleen was still in college, several other Corcorans showed up at UNI's doors. Virginia, 24, started her major in business-distributive education in 1969 and graduated in 1973. She teaches in Southeast Polk, is married and lives in Des Moines.

Next came Wayne, 23, who had the same major as Virginia. He graduated in 1975 and is now in Europe. Sharon, 21, also graduated last spring with a business major. She is now Sharon Rogers and lives in West Des Moines.

The Corcoran family is close, not only in ages, but in concern for each other. The older children always helped the younger ones as they entered UNI. The year Colleen, Charles, Virginia, Wayne and Sharon all went to school in Cedar Falls, Mrs. Corcoran said the off-campus rooms and married student housing were the scenes of many Sunday family gatherings.

Academically, UNI served the family's needs. Mrs. Corcoran commented, "We all feel UNI is an excellent school and no one considered going anywhere else."

There are now two Corcorans at UNI. Lynn, 19, started this fall after one year at Calmar Area I school. He plans to continue in woodworking and industrial arts. Linda, 18, also started college this fall.

Back home in Fairbank is Diane, 16, a junior at Wapsie Valley. There, the farming operation continues and in the spring some of the Corcorans reunite on weekends to help get in the crops.

Educating a family of 10 is no easy task. But, the concern the Corcorans show for each other has made life at UNI a little easier for all of them and a lot more fun.

Merchant Scholarship applications available

Applications for the Merchant Scholarship awards presented annually at UNI are now being accepted. Candidates eligible for the awards include any B.A. graduate from UNI or anyone expecting to receive a B.A. degree from UNI within six months of the deadline.

The deadline is Mar. 1, 1976, for having all materials filed with the committee. However, if material is submitted by Feb. 15, 1976, the committee will notify those whose files are not complete. The decision on scholarship awards will be announced in April, 1976.

Approximately $6,000 will be available for the 1976-77 school year. Funds are provided under the will of the late Professor Frank Ivan Merchant, former UNI language professor, and his sister, Kate Matilda Merchant. Award winners are decided upon by the university president and department heads.

Application blanks may be obtained by writing the Merchant Scholarship Committee chairman, Dr. Roger Hanson, chairman of the physics department, University of Northern Iowa, Cedar Falls, Iowa 50613.
